

GIRLS WORK FOR MEN

Because They Prefer to be Freed
From Scrutiny.

WOMEN ASK MANY QUESTIONS

Therefore the Girls Like Men Employers Better—How Skeletons Are Brought Out by Women.

Why does the average woman prefer men as employers?

Quite likely the foremost reason is because men make "competency" the first requisite of their "help" irrespective of reasons that prompt or compel a woman to engage in wage employment. He does not seek the fair applicant, why she desires work or whether she was brought up in company with luxuriant expectations or on short measure of comfort. His straightforward demand is her propensity to do the work in a way to contribute to his business interest.

When a woman hires one of her own black silks. Jet belts also enrich black silks. They are very narrow or else fancifully wide and shaped to the figure. Fine jet is used to embroidery silk and velvet. Long fringes of jet are in vogue for waists. They are known in Paris as "jet rain."

A lovely morning gown for a bride is of bolero-like cashmere with short sleeves of white guipure lace. It is confined at the waist with white velvet ribbons. For a simpler gown a striped pink and gray French flannel with pink and gray ribbon is pretty.

The chignon, which in the past has accompanied the hoop skirt, has made its appearance as the Rossetti knot. There is, however, in this case nothing in a name, as the inimitable exuberance is nothing more nor less than the old chignon revived.

Among the most elegant imported velvet capes are those reaching only to the waist line, in violet, green and iridescent shades. A beautiful model of this sort has an example of passementerie in wavy cords which nearly covers the velvet.

Neck ribbons are coming into style again. They are generally in velvet and light colors, green, yellow, pink, ruby or blue, and are fastened by a jeweled stick pin on one side.

Quaint bags to carry with our old-fashioned gowns will be in vogue soon.—The newest sleeves have ruffles. These she wants to know about her previous associations. She feels that it is her privilege to find out why the applicant is thrown upon her own resources. She more frequently than otherwise carries this curious sense of might over right into brazen effect. When accused of undue boldness in this respect the gentle business firm backs up her rough-and-ready method with the essential, clear-through respectability of the shop.

EMPIRE GOWN IN PALE-BLUE SILK, CREAM TULLE, PALE-BLUE CHIFFON EMBROIDERED IN CREAM, AND PALE-PINK SATIN RIBBON.

It cannot be admitted that this kind of reasoning is consistent inasmuch as when she requires masculine service the dictation includes only price and ability.

Certainty, she should have more regard for the woman previously in her employ than to introduce among them a notorious character. When she asks for the keys of even the small skeleton closets of the fair applicant, she is taking care of the necessities of one of her own sex. Under the cloak of business she is a meddler.

Men accord equality of treatment to women and men employ with the exception of wages.

The form of supposed gentler nature makes several other exceptions of her own sex.

An every day remark of the fair wage-worker is:

"Money and how I do hate to deal with a woman!"

ruffles commence at the hand and extend to the elbow. This sleeve is the old "bell" sleeve revived.

Accordion plaited velvet will be used this season for facing hat brims. Accordion bows of accordion plaited lace are also to be used.

Ball drops attached to gimp headings are in constant demand for jacket trimmings.

About Foreign Women.

Some time ago Princess Beatrice proposed this question: "If you were not to be yourself, what Englishman or Englishwoman would you rather be?"

She wants to know about her previous associations. She feels that it is her privilege to find out why the applicant is thrown upon her own resources. She more frequently than otherwise carries this curious sense of might over right into brazen effect. When accused of undue boldness in this respect the gentle business firm backs up her rough-and-ready method with the essential, clear-through respectability of the shop.

It cannot be admitted that this kind of reasoning is consistent inasmuch as when she requires masculine service the dictation includes only price and ability.

Certainty, she should have more regard for the woman previously in her employ than to introduce among them a notorious character. When she asks for the keys of even the small skeleton closets of the fair applicant, she is taking care of the necessities of one of her own sex. Under the cloak of business she is a meddler.

Men accord equality of treatment to women and men employ with the exception of wages.

The form of supposed gentler nature makes several other exceptions of her own sex.

An every day remark of the fair wage-worker is:

"Money and how I do hate to deal with a woman!"

Ball drops attached to gimp headings are in constant demand for jacket trimmings.

Princess Beatrice proposed this question: "If you were not to be yourself, what Englishman or Englishwoman would you rather be?"

She wants to know about her previous associations. She feels that it is her privilege to find out why the applicant is thrown upon her own resources. She more frequently than otherwise carries this curious sense of might over right into brazen effect. When accused of undue boldness in this respect the gentle business firm backs up her rough-and-ready method with the essential, clear-through respectability of the shop.

It cannot be admitted that this kind of reasoning is consistent inasmuch as when she requires masculine service the dictation includes only price and ability.

Certainty, she should have more regard for the woman previously in her employ than to introduce among them a notorious character. When she asks for the keys of even the small skeleton closets of the fair applicant, she is taking care of the necessities of one of her own sex. Under the cloak of business she is a meddler.

Men accord equality of treatment to women and men employ with the exception of wages.

The form of supposed gentler nature makes several other exceptions of her own sex.

An every day remark of the fair wage-worker is:

"Money and how I do hate to deal with a woman!"

Ball drops attached to gimp headings are in constant demand for jacket trimmings.

Princess Beatrice proposed this question: "If you were not to be yourself, what Englishman or Englishwoman would you rather be?"

She wants to know about her previous associations. She feels that it is her privilege to find out why the applicant is thrown upon her own resources. She more frequently than otherwise carries this curious sense of might over right into brazen effect. When accused of undue boldness in this respect the gentle business firm backs up her rough-and-ready method with the essential, clear-through respectability of the shop.

It cannot be admitted that this kind of reasoning is consistent inasmuch as when she requires masculine service the dictation includes only price and ability.

Certainty, she should have more regard for the woman previously in her employ than to introduce among them a notorious character. When she asks for the keys of even the small skeleton closets of the fair applicant, she is taking care of the necessities of one of her own sex. Under the cloak of business she is a meddler.

Men accord equality of treatment to women and men employ with the exception of wages.

The form of supposed gentler nature makes several other exceptions of her own sex.

An every day remark of the fair wage-worker is:

"Money and how I do hate to deal with a woman!"

Ball drops attached to gimp headings are in constant demand for jacket trimmings.

Princess Beatrice proposed this question: "If you were not to be yourself, what Englishman or Englishwoman would you rather be?"

She wants to know about her previous associations. She feels that it is her privilege to find out why the applicant is thrown upon her own resources. She more frequently than otherwise carries this curious sense of might over right into brazen effect. When accused of undue boldness in this respect the gentle business firm backs up her rough-and-ready method with the essential, clear-through respectability of the shop.

It cannot be admitted that this kind of reasoning is consistent inasmuch as when she requires masculine service the dictation includes only price and ability.

Certainty, she should have more regard for the woman previously in her employ than to introduce among them a notorious character. When she asks for the keys of even the small skeleton closets of the fair applicant, she is taking care of the necessities of one of her own sex. Under the cloak of business she is a meddler.

Men accord equality of treatment to women and men employ with the exception of wages.

The form of supposed gentler nature makes several other exceptions of her own sex.

An every day remark of the fair wage-worker is:

"Money and how I do hate to deal with a woman!"

Ball drops attached to gimp headings are in constant demand for jacket trimmings.

Princess Beatrice proposed this question: "If you were not to be yourself, what Englishman or Englishwoman would you rather be?"

She wants to know about her previous associations. She feels that it is her privilege to find out why the applicant is thrown upon her own resources. She more frequently than otherwise carries this curious sense of might over right into brazen effect. When accused of undue boldness in this respect the gentle business firm backs up her rough-and-ready method with the essential, clear-through respectability of the shop.

It cannot be admitted that this kind of reasoning is consistent inasmuch as when she requires masculine service the dictation includes only price and ability.

Certainty, she should have more regard for the woman previously in her employ than to introduce among them a notorious character. When she asks for the keys of even the small skeleton closets of the fair applicant, she is taking care of the necessities of one of her own sex. Under the cloak of business she is a meddler.

Men accord equality of treatment to women and men employ with the exception of wages.

The form of supposed gentler nature makes several other exceptions of her own sex.

An every day remark of the fair wage-worker is:

"Money and how I do hate to deal with a woman!"

Ball drops attached to gimp headings are in constant demand for jacket trimmings.

Princess Beatrice proposed this question: "If you were not to be yourself, what Englishman or Englishwoman would you rather be?"

She wants to know about her previous associations. She feels that it is her privilege to find out why the applicant is thrown upon her own resources. She more frequently than otherwise carries this curious sense of might over right into brazen effect. When accused of undue boldness in this respect the gentle business firm backs up her rough-and-ready method with the essential, clear-through respectability of the shop.

It cannot be admitted that this kind of reasoning is consistent inasmuch as when she requires masculine service the dictation includes only price and ability.

Certainty, she should have more regard for the woman previously in her employ than to introduce among them a notorious character. When she asks for the keys of even the small skeleton closets of the fair applicant, she is taking care of the necessities of one of her own sex. Under the cloak of business she is a meddler.

Men accord equality of treatment to women and men employ with the exception of wages.

The form of supposed gentler nature makes several other exceptions of her own sex.

An every day remark of the fair wage-worker is:

"Money and how I do hate to deal with a woman!"

Ball drops attached to gimp headings are in constant demand for jacket trimmings.

Princess Beatrice proposed this question: "If you were not to be yourself, what Englishman or Englishwoman would you rather be?"

She wants to know about her previous associations. She feels that it is her privilege to find out why the applicant is thrown upon her own resources. She more frequently than otherwise carries this curious sense of might over right into brazen effect. When accused of undue boldness in this respect the gentle business firm backs up her rough-and-ready method with the essential, clear-through respectability of the shop.

It cannot be admitted that this kind of reasoning is consistent inasmuch as when she requires masculine service the dictation includes only price and ability.

Certainty, she should have more regard for the woman previously in her employ than to introduce among them a notorious character. When she asks for the keys of even the small skeleton closets of the fair applicant, she is taking care of the necessities of one of her own sex. Under the cloak of business she is a meddler.

Men accord equality of treatment to women and men employ with the exception of wages.

The form of supposed gentler nature makes several other exceptions of her own sex.

An every day remark of the fair wage-worker is:

"Money and how I do hate to deal with a woman!"

Ball drops attached to gimp headings are in constant demand for jacket trimmings.

Princess Beatrice proposed this question: "If you were not to be yourself, what Englishman or Englishwoman would you rather be?"

She wants to know about her previous associations. She feels that it is her privilege to find out why the applicant is thrown upon her own resources. She more frequently than otherwise carries this curious sense of might over right into brazen effect. When accused of undue boldness in this respect the gentle business firm backs up her rough-and-ready method with the essential, clear-through respectability of the shop.

It cannot be admitted that this kind of reasoning is consistent inasmuch as when she requires masculine service the dictation includes only price and ability.

Certainty, she should have more regard for the woman previously in her employ than to introduce among them a notorious character. When she asks for the keys of even the small skeleton closets of the fair applicant, she is taking care of the necessities of one of her own sex. Under the cloak of business she is a meddler.

Men accord equality of treatment to women and men employ with the exception of wages.

The form of supposed gentler nature makes several other exceptions of her own sex.

An every day remark of the fair wage-worker is:

"Money and how I do hate to deal with a woman!"

Ball drops attached to gimp headings are in constant demand for jacket trimmings.

Princess Beatrice proposed this question: "If you were not to be yourself, what Englishman or Englishwoman would you rather be?"

She wants to know about her previous associations. She feels that it is her privilege to find out why the applicant is thrown upon her own resources. She more frequently than otherwise carries this curious sense of might over right into brazen effect. When accused of undue boldness in this respect the gentle business firm backs up her rough-and-ready method with the essential, clear-through respectability of the shop.

It cannot be admitted that this kind of reasoning is consistent inasmuch as when she requires masculine service the dictation includes only price and ability.

Certainty, she should have more regard for the woman previously in her employ than to introduce among them a notorious character. When she asks for the keys of even the small skeleton closets of the fair applicant, she is taking care of the necessities of one of her own sex. Under the cloak of business she is a meddler.

Men accord equality of treatment to women and men employ with the exception of wages.

The form of supposed gentler nature makes several other exceptions of her own sex.

An every day remark of the fair wage-worker is:

"Money and how I do hate to deal with a woman!"

Ball drops attached to gimp headings are in constant demand for jacket trimmings.

Princess Beatrice proposed this question: "If you were not to be yourself, what Englishman or Englishwoman would you rather be?"

She wants to know about her previous associations. She feels that it is her privilege to find out why the applicant is thrown upon her own resources. She more frequently than otherwise carries this curious sense of might over right into brazen effect. When accused of undue boldness in this respect the gentle business firm backs up her rough-and-ready method with the essential, clear-through respectability of the shop.

It cannot be admitted that this kind of reasoning is consistent inasmuch as when she requires masculine service the dictation includes only price and ability.

Certainty, she should have more regard for the woman previously in her employ than to introduce among them a notorious character. When she asks for the keys of even the small skeleton closets of the fair applicant, she is taking care of the necessities of one of her own sex. Under the cloak of business she is a meddler.

Men accord equality of treatment to women and men employ with the exception of wages.

The form of supposed gentler nature makes several other exceptions of her own sex.

An every day remark of the fair wage-worker is:

"Money and how I do hate to deal with a woman!"

Ball drops attached to gimp headings are in constant demand for jacket trimmings.

Princess Beatrice proposed this question: "If you were not to be yourself, what Englishman or Englishwoman would you rather be?"

She wants to know about her previous associations. She feels that it is her privilege to find out why the applicant is thrown upon her own resources. She more frequently than otherwise carries this curious sense of might over right into brazen effect. When accused of undue boldness in this respect the gentle business firm backs up